HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The farm on which Sondela Nature Reserve now stands, is steeped in history and is well documented. Its closest town is Warmbaths (11km), a historical area known for its healing waters and which only became proclaimed as a town as late as 1921. Johann Rissik (1857 – 1925) was the original owner of the farm Zandfontein (alias Sandfontein), then a 10,000 Morg farm which later became known as Tweefontein, after the two natural fountains on the property.

Rissik was liberal minded and tolerant and was well-known for his integrity. He was well-educated and had a love for literature and classical music and his grasp of languages made him fluent in English, French, German, Afrikaans and Dutch. He purchased Zandfontein in 1887 and in 1890 added the adjacent farm Doornput which he purchased from J C Minnaar. In the memoirs A. Rissik, Letters to my Grandchildren 1969, mention is made of the herds of wild game, guinea fowl and variety of antelope to be found on the property, although Rissik brought in Impala from the then Sabie Nature Reserve (now Kruger National Park).

Thomas Baines, in his book The Gold Regions of South Eastern Africa, mentions the abundant water and wild animals to be found on the farm Zandfontein (or Sandfontein as he called it then). He speaks of spending the night in December 1871 close to a fountain on Zandfontein and documented that the noise from the frogs was so loud that they could barely sleep all night. This fountain was in fact one of the main watering holes for pioneers travelling north by ox-wagon and horseback and has in its entire history have never been dry.

During the Anglo-Boer war (1902) the British government gave Rissik building material and pipes in lieu of the use of his land during the war. The building material included sandstone from a quarry at Buiskop which also supplied the stone used in the construction of the Union Buildings in Pretoria. Rissik used this sandstone to build the farmhouse and out-buildings on Zandfontein while the pipes were laid from the natural fountain to the farmhouse to supply the dwelling with water. These original sandstone buildings can still be seen on Sondela today: the original car house is now Piccinini's Bistro and the original Rissik guest house is now classrooms for Sondela Academy.

Rissik's obvious love of the land (he was the Surveyor General of the Republic of South Africa) was not limited to his ministerial position in the Louis Botha cabinet. In his private capacity he farmed ostriches on his farm and in 1908, with the assistance of J C Gilfillan, set up a large orange production on Zandfontein. From 1904 to 1924 the farm was rented to J C Gilfillan.

Johann Rissik passed away on 26th August 1925 at which time the farm and livestock were bequeathed to his wife, Miemie Rissik, who in turn bequeathed the property to her sons, Harry and Pieter, upon her death in 1947.

From the Rissik family, ownership of Tweefontein passed to Dr Piccinini, an Italian civil engineer who was one of the founding members of Concor Construction and who had maintained a vested interest in South Africa since 1948. After searching for an undeveloped farm not far from Johannesburg, Dr Piccinini took transfer of the two farms Tweefontein and Doornput in 1976. Dr Piccinini retained strong ties with South Africa until his death, at the age of 81 in 1996, and the property has remained in the family to this day.

1. Giraffes are the tallest mammals on Earth, with their long necks and legs allowing them to reach heights of up to 19 feet.
2. These graceful animals have a unique coat pattern, with no two giraffes having the same spots, similar to human fingerprints.
3. Giraffes have a powerful kick that they can use to defend themselves from predators, which can be fatal to lions.
4. Despite their long necks, giraffes have the same number of neck vertebrae as humans, which is seven.
5. Giraffes only need to drink water once every few days, as they get most of their hydration from the leaves they eat.
